Q: 2d cartesian coordinates projection in openlayers What is the proper projection for representing points in 2d cartesian coordinates in openlayers? I am working in QGIS 2.18.10. I am using tile zoom 1337 and print composer 1600 which includes a "projection projection" function. I have been using EPSG:2959 EPSG:3035, EPSG:4326 and EPSG:3857. The tiles are EPSG:900913 (Meters). I am only interested in 2d cartesian coordinates because I am going to evaluate the distance in meters between two points. A: In OpenLayers, the native coordinates are Cartesian by default. And EPSG:4326 is indeed a good choice. The Bioconductor Genetics Ontology (BGEO): a comprehensive and coordinated curation effort for the genetic basis of disease. High-throughput experimentation is leading to the flood of newly available biomedical data. A major driver of the adoption of the modern scientific method is to enable rigorous data integration. Systems biology strives to model, and then to simulate, complex biological phenomena at multiple levels of biological organization. The complexity of this model, however, poses a major challenge for experimental data integration. Many high-throughput methods, including Genomics, Proteomics, Transcriptomics and Metabolomics, collect data that are stored in disparate data repositories. Integration, therefore, requires the systematic identification, annotation and cross-analysis of the data types collected. Thus, obtaining access to a comprehensive and cohesive representation of the available data that can be modeled using computational simulation is highly desirable. This report presents a comprehensive and coordinated effort to create a relational, federated, biological database, the Bioconductor Genetics Ontology (BGEO), through a community-driven curation effort. The scope of data collected in this curation effort is broad, ranging from genetic diseases to biological interactions. The BGEO, while focused on gene-phenotype curation, should not be construed as an advocacy for particular genetic approaches or tools. The BGEO will allow other communities to build upon the initial efforts, modify or augment the data model, and curate the BGEO to suit their needs."The thing that makes him do this is he's a performer," the actor said of Reeves. Subtype of vasoactive intestinal peptide receptor 2 expressed in the canine carotid body is TPDY subtype. The carotid body is a tissue that plays an important role in the regulation of arterial blood pressure and the control of breathing in mammals. The carotid body expresses a functional peptide receptor type 2 (subtype Y). The peptide that functions as an endogenous ligand for the receptor has not been reported, but vasoactive intestinal peptide (VIP) was originally isolated from a tissue termed the carotid body. This study was undertaken to determine whether subtypes of VIP receptor exist in the carotid body. In the carotid body examined in the present study, neither VIP-immunoreactive neurons nor VIP receptors were detected. However, immunostaining revealed the expression of VIP receptors 2 (VIP(2)-R) in the carotid body and the carotid sinus. In contrast, mRNA encoding VIP(2)-R was not detectable in the carotid body by RT-PCR analysis. These results indicate that VIP(2)-R subtype is expressed in the carotid body, and that this peptide may act as a neurotransmitter and/or an autocrine or paracrine regulatory substance in the carotid body.It seems the World Championship in Mortal Kombat X has an audience bigger than not only the tournament itself, but the entire Mortal Kombat series. This weekend, the viewership for the tournament surpassed the entire viewership of the last Mortal Kombat in 2011. The tournament is well-known for offering some of the best Mortal Kombat matches, especially with the introduction of characters like Hell-Bat, Raiden, and Scorpion, which you can watch for yourself below in the finals between Shen and Kenshi. Mortal Kombat X is the first game in the franchise since 2011, and considering many of the characters are unique to the game, it's no surprise the audience was larger than the last game. We've seen the tournament's viewership grow throughout the weekend, reaching over two million viewers as of press time. While the tournament is well-known for its high production value, other tournaments have done better. In fact, the biggest Mortal Kombat series tournament of all time, Mortal Kombat 4, had twice as many viewers at the time. While viewership will always be the greatest test of a tournament's success
